Now that the democrats have agreed to the republican rules, the work of unseating the members of the former party will be prosecuted with vigor until the majority of the "grand old party" is sufficient to enact any measure its leaders may determine upon. Meddling with Southern elections seems to be the chief aim of these leaders, and there is now a fair prospect of a return to the republican regime of reconstruction days. This, however, as in the first case, will result in a reaction, which will be of great benefit to the democratic party and to the
